Fund Managers Comments

As at 29 January 2021

Equity markets were slightly lower in January as an initial rally fizzled out after a couple of weeks on the back of concern about the slower than expected distribution of vaccines in Europe as well as an increased risk of transmission from variations of the virus in the UK, Brazil and South Africa. Against this background, the Fund's unit price was unchanged while our benchmark index, the STOXX Financials Index, fell by 3.7% (in sterling terms).

The largest contributor to performance was VPC Specialty Lending which rose on the back of news that a special purpose acquisition vehicle (SPAC) it has a stake in had risen sharply on the announcement that it had entered into an agreement to combine with a Bakkt, a business spun out of International Continental Exchange, focused on digital assets including cryptocurrencies. Other good performers during the month included Personal Group Holdings, following a reassuring update, and Riverstone Credit Opportunities.

Conversely our weakest performers were all non-life insurance holdings including Arch Capital, Chubb and Allianz. Fourth-quarter results have for the most part been strong from the subsector, with only a small number of exceptions, highlighting the improving pricing environment. As a result, we believe the weaker performance can be explained by investors rotating out of more defensive sectors into more cyclical parts of the market to benefit from the expectation of economies continuing to reflate over the course of the next two years.

US bank fourth-quarter results came in better than expected, largely due to the much lower loan loss provisions than expected reflecting the resilience of the US economy albeit due to the huge fiscal and monetary stimulus in place to offset the impact of the pandemic. Investment banking revenues also came in stronger than expected but not surprisingly loan balances have continued to decline, reflecting weak demand for credit, and we would not expect it to pick up until the latter half of the year.

In conversations with investors, one of the pushbacks for investing in the sector is the outlook for interest rates. We believe that financials can continue to rally from current levels, if the news on the rollout of vaccinations and hospitalisations continues to improve, without the need for interest rate expectations to change in the short term. However, we would be surprised if bond yields do not back up if growth expectations improve.

Investors must ask themselves where they see interest rates and bond yields going over the next 2-3 years. We are at the bottom of an economic downturn where interest rates have been cut and as recovery picks up is it highly likely that markets will start to price in a rise. Earnings forecasts assume no increase in interest rates, for the next couple of years and longer in some cases, therefore no improvement in net interest margins or underlying profitability.

However, if interest rate expectations do change then that has significant implications for asset allocation and financials will be one of the biggest beneficiaries. With the sector still trading at historically low multiples, investors risk being poorly positioned if there is a sharp change in sentiment. As was seen in November, markets will respond very quickly to the improving news flow and by then it may well be too late for those who have not as the sector rerates sharply.

Interest rates aside, however, over the past 30 years financials have without fail outperformed underlying equity markets from market lows whether it was the early 1990s' recession, the UK exiting the ERM, the Asian financial crisis and collapse of Long-Term Capital Management (LTCM), the TMT bubble, the global financial crisis, the eurozone crisis and the UK referendum. In the first year following the date markets hit a low, the outperformance is fairly consistent and continues into the second year albeit the dispersion of returns increases.

The only time the sector gave up some of its outperformance was following the recovery in equity markets, from the collapse of LTCM in October 1998, as the TMT bubble began to inflate through 1999. If we take the market low as 23 March last year, financials have underperformed to the end of January by 6.9%. Even if we take the performance from the day Pfizer announced the results of its vaccine trials, resulting in a sharp rotation back into financials, the sector has only outperformed by 6.5%.

This compares to historic outperformance of 19.3%, 22.5% and 25.6% over six months, one year and two years from the market lows listed above. This would suggest that if history is repeated, the sector offers much more relative upside. Logically, as the sector is a beneficiary of economies opening up, it makes sense that it should be outperforming. There have been no capital issues and its earnings are forecast to rise sharply as loan and insurance losses normalise over the next couple of years.
