Fund Managers Comments

As at 29 January 2021

The start of the new year proved to be tricky for the Fund, though after the building retail investor drama over the month we were pleased with performance until the final week. In a matter of days, the Fund underperformed by just over 2%, as the MSCI World Small Health Care Total Return Index returned 4.9% (in dollar terms) versus the Fund's return of 2.7% (I US$ Acc Share Class). Clearly our most disappointing monthly performance since inception, exactly one year ago, these were not the figures we were planning to deliver on our birthday month but pleased our first year is inked firmly ahead.

While we would be happier to point the finger elsewhere, the buck mostly stops with our relative positioning and stock selection more than anything else. The biotechnology and healthcare equipment areas were our biggest detractors from a sub-sector basis, and not from an allocation perspective, despite being underweight the biotech area by a good clip. We were not exposed to benchmark member Novavax, a smaller vaccine company in the hunt to produce additional coronavirus vaccine supply. Their recent clinical data update was clearly more than acceptable, this along with some short interest in the stock as well as retail momentum behind the area lead to a sizeable stock move. We were pleased that both Johnson & Johnson and Novavax produced data for their respective vaccines that are likely to build on the current global vaccine supply. Our only regret is not being directly invested accordingly.

Our healthcare equipment performance was down to selection; our holding in iRhythm Technologies, a remote cardiac monitoring technology company had an unfortunate update in terms of a perceived cut to reimbursement from one of their primary US Medicare Administrative Contractors (MAC). While we appreciated the complexity of the ongoing back and forth, the most recent payment update had been positive, so much so that three M&A transactions involving large company acquirers (Boston Scientific, Hill-Rom Holdings and Philips) quickly followed suit as well as a senior management member of the Medtronic cardiovascular team resigning to take the helm at iRhythm Technologies. Make no mistake, we take full responsibility here and while it is some consolation that we were not alone in our reimbursement take, it remains a bitter pill to swallow – we would much rather have had a better read on the resulting scenarios, should everything not go to plan. It may well be that the rates as posted are in fact an error but our digging through the related documents since then suggests the 'emergency' for resolution lies not with the MAC so the timing element remains very opaque. As the stock rallied on this 'error or omission' prospect in the subsequent days, we reduced our position accordingly.

On the positive side of the ledger, healthcare technologies and facilities were our top two subsector contributors. Renalytix AI, an information technology company that has devised a measure of kidney function risk in a prospective fashion, received a positive national reimbursement decision for their KidneyIntelX. In addition, we received two additional M&A bids for portfolio holdings over the month, one of these was the healthcare technology company Change Healthcare which is to be acquired by the large managed care company, United Healthcare. The Fund has enjoyed at least one bid a month since August, with November being the only exception. We continue to see the backdrop ripe for ongoing M&A across the board and will be disappointed not to see further consolidation for the healthcare sector.

Looking ahead, we see good reason to be optimistic for smaller companies at large, including healthcare, though having done extremely well over what was previously unforged recession territory perhaps on a more selective basis going forward. Valuations for smaller healthcare companies are more challenging, especially on a relative basis should the vaccine effort support an ongoing economic reopening. While it has not been obvious from the headline indices' figures, there has been a decent amount of rotation beneath that into more cyclical areas of the market, including those found within the healthcare sector. The biopharmaceutical arena and the innovation emanating there has indeed been the saviour of the pandemic crisis to date. Investors, and particularly retail investors of late, have clearly valued the shares with exuberance which we have endeavoured to crystallise in any extreme measure and reinvest on the more consumer side of healthcare.

The global pandemic has also laid bare areas where systems and delivery of healthcare are very much in need of investment – state of the art information technology with real time data in acute and less emergent scenarios is particularly lacking. There are challenges ahead in terms of disparities of care as well the cost of the pandemic and we are implying more than just the economic costs but the mental and physical wellbeing attention that will be required too. These, and more, are worthy and deserving of investment going forwards though who will foot the bill? The politics of the pandemic have certainly been unfortunate though, for the moment, most seem to be moving to a more unified global song sheet in terms of getting more timely rapid testing in place and as many vaccines administered as possible. In sum, we see more opportunity than not for smaller healthcare company investors, and we will continue to strive to capture as many of these as possible to the benefit of performance and, in turn, unitholders.

Happy New Year, may it be happier and healthier for everyone.
